

Yankees-Rays Pull Away From Sox

The Boston Redsox are 14-14 to date not a bad start for most teams in baseball. But the Redsox have two teams in their division that are better than most teams in baseball. The New York Yankees a few months removed from their twenty-seventh World Series Title, are back and looking better than last year. The Tampa Bay Rays who were plagued with injuries last year are back at full health and looking unbeatable. The Redsox who are 6.5 games back in the division better find some magic soon or they will be too far back to make any kind of impact. Boston's troubles can't be pinpointed; when they are hitting, they will pitch horribly and when they pitch well they do not get any run support. It's only the first week of May but the Redsox were just swept by the dismal Baltimore Oriels. I imagine Terry Francona seat is feeling a little hot right now.

The Mets?

Could this season finally be the season the Mets keep things together for the entire year? As of May 6th the Mets are only 1.5 games behind the NL East Leading Philadelphia Phillies. The Mets got off to a terrible start losing 8 of their first 12 games, but since then the Mets have looked like one of the best teams in the National League. The Mets probably don't have the pitching to stay with the Phillies all year but with the Braves slipping away and the NL West looking hideous the boys from Queens may have a serious shot at making the Playoffs.

Finally Phil!

Phil Mickelson for the first time in his career could take over the top spot in the World Golf Rankings. Tiger Woods has held the spot for 258 weeks in a row. If Phil wins the Players this week and Tiger finishes outside the top 5 Phil Mickelson will become the World's number one player.

Rory Mcilroy torched the weekend field last week at the Quail Hollow Championship. Rory who turned 21 on Tuesday followed up his 65 on Saturday with a course record 62 Sunday to win the tournament by 3 shots. This Weekends Players Championship looks to be open to a number of competitors, there has been no dominate player yet this year on tour, look for someone outside the top 10 in the world rankings to make a serious attempt at winning. My prediction to win England's Lee Westwood, although it's not a major it's pretty close and Lee is due for a big win.

Cheers to Grant Whybark College Golf

There are few times in sports that losing makes you a winner. What Grant Whybark did last week was unbelievable. Grant was playing in his Conference championship for the University of St. Francis. Grant who already was going to National's whether he won the medal or not was tied with Seth Doran, of Olivet Nazarene. Grant and Seth headed to a playoff and on the first hole of the playoff Grant hit his ball 40 yards into the woods allowing Seth the opportunity to be a national competitor too. True sportsman ship!
